AGRICULTURAL STABILIZATION FUND WILL AID MIXED FARMING

OTTAWA, March 22.—The agricultural stabilization fund announced today as a surprise feature of the federal budget, is expected to be of great benefit to the mixed farming industry in Canada. Under this scheme the federal government will fix the value of the English pound at 14.50, and exporters of farm products will be paid on this basis for goods shipped to the Old Country, the federal government paying the difference if the value of the pound falls below 14.50. This will apply to cattle, poultry, bacon, and dairy products, but not to wheat.

HEAVY SNOWFALL

The heaviest snowfall this winter occurred in Bassano district early this week. The snow was soft and wet, and measured five to six inches in depth. The moisture should be of considerable benefit to spring farm operations.

TOWN SHELLS OLD BUILDINGS

The Town of Bassano has disposed of two wooden frame buildings on the main street, selling them to C. S. Lewis. The buildings are the barber shop recently vacated by A. Muebert, and the office now occupied by R. A. Travis, which will be vacated soon.

Says Town Should Have Its Own Municipal Nursery

W. R. Reader, Parks Superintendent of Calgary, Gives Instruction Talk at Board of Trade Meeting

That Bassano should have a municipal nursery for the growing of trees and shrubs was one of the recommendations made by W. R. Reader, superintendent of Parks, Calgary, who addressed the members of the Bassano Board of Trade last Wednesday afternoon.

With a municipal nursery, Mr. Reader said, the town could raise trees and shrubs at very little cost for transplanting to the streets and parks of the town.

Another recommendation made by the parks superintendent was that the trees on the town streets be planted now. When the trees are quite young, he said, it is quite all right to have them close together, but as they grow larger they should have more space in which to grow.

He also said it would be a good plan to plant shrubs where trees had been removed in the lining process. The speaker complimented the citizens of Bassano on their tree-mindedness and was glad to see such an interest taken in town and home beautification.

Board Of Trade Plans To Rebuild Swimming Pool

Scheme to Raise Large Sum of Money in New Taking Shape—Would Build Concrete Pool and Make Other Permanent Improvements to Grounds and Equipment

S. L. Frazier and Family GOING BACK TO MISSOURI
S. L. Frazier, who lives on the H. H. Homens farm about half a mile south-east of Bassano, plans to move back to his old home state of Missouri. Mr. Frazier is holding an auction sale at the farm on Thursday of this week, March 22, with A. A. McGregor as auctioneer.

The Bassano Board of Trade in regular session Wednesday noon of this week listened to the report of the committee investigating the scheme to rebuild the swimming pool. The plan involves the expenditure of about $2,500 for a concrete pool and other improvements of a permanent nature.

The pool, which was built some years ago, is deteriorating rapidly. The wooden pile, which form the sides are rotting and will not last much longer. They should be replaced with a material of a more lasting nature.

To finance this scheme is a big undertaking, but the board has a money-raising plan which it is now working on, and will soon put into effect. It is hoped to raise at least the sum required, and perhaps a substantial surplus.

A busy meeting was a busy session, and adjournment did not take place until an hour after the usual time.

Four members were in attendance. The board went on record as favoring the money plan as applied to the swimming pool. The Canadian Chamber of Commerce had asked for an expression of opinion regarding the railway problem, and the board took this, and after a lengthy discussion at an earlier meeting with executive members, the board was in attendance.

Wm. McLaws gave notice that at the next regular meeting he would move that the sum of $50 be given to the ball union provision as a purpose of making permanent improvements in the tennis club grounds.

Wm. McLaws mentioned the proposed change in the Debt Adjustment Act and expressed his opposition to the bill unless provision was made for certain legal action as in the original act. The matter was turned over to the executive.

Mr. B. Reader, superintendent of parks, Calgary, gave an interesting talk on tree planting and town beautification with trees and shrubbery.

She tried to feel brave and determined, but when at last she got into bed, sleep was impossible. She was lying over and over again these few moments with Dennis O'Hara. His leg had been the real thing—she said set upon her heart and soul forever.

The O'Hara had been in New York for three days when a letter came from Pauline's mother. Pauline was breakfasting in bed. She had had three late nights and was tired. She also had a very new and becoming negligee, and she wanted to see whether Dennis noticed it. Apparently he had not. He got up at the usual time, bathed, and went downstairs to breakfast.

"You ought to be," Pauline scolded. "I'm sure you must be tired."

But Dennis hated breakfast in bed, and said so.

"I'll have mine downstairs and come up again," he said. So Pauline had her alone. There was a full mirror in a wardrobe door opposite, and in it she could see her reflection—a very charming reflection. The new negligee suited her, she decided, and she wondered vaguely why Dennis had not told her so.

She sighed and took up the letter. My Darling Child, her mother wrote. I am sitting up to bed writing this. As I have not been very well, it seems such a long time since I saw you, Pauline, and as Daddy has to go to Los Angeles as business for a few days, I am wondering if Dennis will spare you a little time to be with me. I'll tell you my silly old heart again, so Dr. Panthas says, but I feel sure a rest and sight of you will put me right. How are you, sweetheart? I shall tell you all so little, and I long to see you and know that you are happy. Of course, if Dennis will come up, we shall be only too pleased to have him, but I am sure he cannot spare time to leave business after such a long absence. There was a good deal more, little details of the home life which seemed to Pauline so far away now and interesting. That's the last appeal.

"Daddy come if you can; you don't know how much I want to see you," Pauline said the letter down with a feeling of guilt. She wished she could be a member of the trip to New York and yet in a way she was glad now she had not, because the letter would never have been written. She asked and danced to put on coffee, and then she saw another letter which had slipped out of sight behind the last one. It was addressed to her father's hand, and Pauline's heart missed a beat as she tore the envelope open.

My Dear Pauline: I've not to go to Los Angeles for a few days on urgent business. Could you manage to come to my mother's? She is not at all well, and I do not like leaving her alone. I am sure Dennis will spare you if you will tell him the facts. I hope you are both well.

In haste, Your loving Daddy.

"I must go, or course I must go," Pauline said aloud. She sat up in bed and was surprised to see how her hand trembled as she lifted her pen. The door opened and Dennis came in.

"Mother's ill," Pauline said in a quivering voice.

"Hill me see," he took the two letters from her and read them. "It's not as bad as that, is it?" he asked chidingly.

Pauline's eyes filled with tears. "I shall have to go, Dennis."

Dennis walked to the window and stood looking out into the street.

"Of course," he said, after a moment.

"You needn't come," Pauline said breathlessly, and waited. "It can go by myself quite well," she added as he did not speak. "If you'll send a wire and see me off."

"Do you think you need to today?"

"I'm sure you see these letters have been sent on from home, so that makes it a day later."

Dennis turned round. "If you'd like me to come with you—"

She was so thankful to him for suggesting it that she broke into eager refusal. "Of course not! I would be ever so dull for you with Daddy away."

She slipped out a feed; she had quite forgotten her new negligee, but for the first time Dennis noticed it.

"Where did you get that thing?" he asked.

"What thing?" Oh this," she asked, with pleasure. "It is rather nice, isn't it?" Barbara chose it, she thought, and she had said all the same.

"It's not so bad," Dennis said grudgingly, and then with awkward grace, he added, "I'll tell you."

"Oh, do you think so?" She ran to him and lifted her face to be kissed. "It's such a shame your holiday is being spoiled," she added a moment later. "What will you do without me?"

Dennis thrust a hand into his coat pocket.

"I heard from home today that you were coming to town for a few days. He wanted to see you. He thought," He broke off and added almost too urgently, "stay till tomorrow."

"Oh, I'd love to, but if Mother is ill—I'll pack now. You go and look up a train. Barbara will be sorry, won't she? We'd planned so many things."

Dennis did not answer; he stood watching her with moody eyes.

She felt perfectly happy, even though she was leaving Dennis. She was sure he would miss her terribly, but after all it was only for a few days, and then they would be together again.

Barbara was dressing when Pauline rang her up.

"Good-bye!" For a moment Barbara's heart seemed to stand still. What had happened?

"Good-bye—what on earth—"

"My Mother—she's not very well, Pauline explained. "I'm going to stay with her for a few days. I'm awfully sorry, but—"

"Shan't I see you again?"

Barbara's voice was a little breathless. "Wouldn't she be able to say good-bye to Dennis?"

"I'm going by the twelve-five train—it's the best. Dennis has booked a seat and he's coming to see me off."

Then he was not going with her. Barbara's mind quivered.

"The twelve-five from where?"

"Grand Central."

"I'll be there to see you off."

"Will you?" You are a darling, Barbara. You'll look after Dennis for me, won't you? I'll be away for a few days so Dennis will have him, but I shall be much happier if I know you are looking after him as well, Barbara."

"I don't imagine he will, though."

"Of course he will! I thought you'd put that idea out of your head. I'm sure he really likes you, Barbara."

Barbara gave a short laugh. "I'll do my best—if you really want me to," she said reluctantly.

"Thank you so much. Then you'll be at Grand Central."

Barbara turned away from the phone. She felt angry; she felt as if she had deliberately taken a treason from a child's hand, as she put on her hat and coat and sent for a taxi.

Pauline was a tool to leave Dennis in New York. Dennis, she knew, couldn't see the way the wind was blowing? It was absurd to be so blind to a friend's warning.

"She reached Grand Central a minute before the train started."

She was already seated. She looked somewhat like a child going back to school after a happy holiday.

"Don't lean out of the window," Barbara teased her, "and wait till the train stops."

Pauline laughed. "I'll send you a wire directly after I get home, Dennis darling—and you'll write me."

He made a grimace.

"You used to write lovely letters when we were engaged."

Barbara laughed mockingly.

"What a shame that the busy past is in his face. That she was bitternately jealous of that past and of the letters he had written to Pauline."

The guard blew his whistle, and Pauline leaned out of the window and put her arm around her husband's neck.

"Good-bye, my precious, take care of yourself. Take care of him, Barbara."

"He's quite capable of taking care of himself," Barbara said coolly.

She stood beside Dennis silently till the train was out of sight; then she spoke. "I'll take a taxi. I'm in a hurry."

"Where are you going?"

"To lunch with Jerry."

"That's not the truth," Dennis said calmly. "I ran into Barbara at the station ten minutes ago and he told me he was going down to Windsor to the races."

Barbara bit her lip and made no reply. Dennis hailed a taxi and followed her into it.

"Roman's, please," he told the driver. "You'll lunch with me," he said as they drove away.

"You're very positive," she answered.

"I am—as positive as I am that you never intended to lunch with Barney." He laid his hand on her knee, but she drew it sharply away.

"Why did you tell me such a fib?" he asked.

She shrank back away from him into the corner.

"I feel such a cad," she said almost violently.

"How do you imagine I feel?"

"I don't think men have any conscience when they want a thing badly enough."

"As badly as I want you, you mean?"

She did not speak; and he went on.

"You've made mistakes, Barbara haven't you?"

"Dennis."

"And paid for them?"

"Quietly."

"Well—I'm paying now."

"You've got a vivid imagination."

"Silence!" He caught her hand suddenly and raised it to his lips. She had taken off her gloves and he felt her palm against his lips as if it were something wonderfully precious, almost sacred.

Barbara closed her eyes. This was what she had wanted; this was what she had longed for and almost prayed for, for months, and yet now it had come she was not happy.

She thought of Pauline, speeding away, and again that terrible feeling swept over her that she was robbing a child of its dearest possession.

Barbara was dressing when Pauline rang her up.

"Good-bye!" For a moment Barbara's heart seemed to stand still. What had happened?

"Good-bye—what on earth—"

"My Mother—she's not very well, Pauline explained. "I'm going to stay with her for a few days. I'm awfully sorry, but—"

"What a shame that the busy past is in his face. That she was bitternately jealous of that past and of the letters he had written to Pauline."

The guard blew his whistle, and Pauline leaned out of the window and put her arm around her husband's neck.

"Good-bye, my precious, take care of yourself. Take care of him, Barbara."

"He's quite capable of taking care of himself," Barbara said coolly.

She stood beside Dennis silently till the train was out of sight; then she spoke. "I'll take a taxi. I'm in a hurry."

"Where are you going?"

"To lunch with Jerry."

"That's not the truth," Dennis said calmly. "I ran into Barbara at the station ten minutes ago and he told me he was going down to Windsor to the races."

Barbara bit her lip and made no reply. Dennis hailed a taxi and followed her into it.

"Roman's, please," he told the driver. "You'll lunch with me," he said as they drove away.

"You're very positive," she answered.

"I am—as positive as I am that you never intended to lunch with Barney." He laid his hand on her knee, but she drew it sharply away.

"Why did you tell me such a fib?" he asked.

She shrank back away from him into the corner.

"I feel such a cad," she said almost violently.

"How do you imagine I feel?"

"I don't think men have any conscience when they want a thing badly enough."

"As badly as I want you, you mean?"

She did not speak; and he went on.

"You've made mistakes, Barbara haven't you?"

"Dennis."

"And paid for them?"

"Quietly."

"Well—I'm paying now."

"You've got a vivid imagination."

"Silence!" He caught her hand suddenly and raised it to his lips. She had taken off her gloves and he felt her palm against his lips as if it were something wonderfully precious, almost sacred.

Barbara closed her eyes. This was what she had wanted; this was what she had longed for and almost prayed for, for months, and yet now it had come she was not happy.

She thought of Pauline, speeding away, and again that terrible feeling swept over her that she was robbing a child of its dearest possession.

Barbara was dressing when Pauline rang her up.

"Good-bye!" For a moment Barbara's heart seemed to stand still. What had happened?

"Good-bye—what on earth—"

"My Mother—she's not very well, Pauline explained. "I'm going to stay with her for a few days. I'm awfully sorry, but—"

"Shan't I see you again?"

Barbara's voice was a little breathless. "Wouldn't she be able to say good-bye to Dennis?"

"I'm going by the twelve-five train—it's the best. Dennis has booked a seat and he's coming to see me off."

Then he was not going with her. Barbara's mind quivered.

"Grand Central."

"I'll be there to see you off."

"Will you?" You are a darling, Barbara. You'll look after Dennis for me, won't you? I'll be away for a few days so Dennis will have him, but I shall be much happier if I know you are looking after him as well, Barbara."

"I don't imagine he will, though."

"Of course he will! I thought you'd put that idea out of your head. I'm sure he really likes you, Barbara."

Barbara gave a short laugh. "I'll do my best—if you really want me to," she said reluctantly.

"Thank you so much. Then you'll be at Grand Central."

Barbara turned away from the phone. She felt angry; she felt as if she had deliberately taken a treason from a child's hand, as she put on her hat and coat and sent for a taxi.

Pauline was a tool to leave Dennis in New York. Dennis, she knew, couldn't see the way the wind was blowing? It was absurd to be so blind to a friend's warning.

"She reached Grand Central a minute before the train started."

She was already seated. She looked somewhat like a child going back to school after a happy holiday.

"Don't lean out of the window," Barbara teased her, "and wait till the train stops."

Pauline laughed. "I'll send you a wire directly after I get home, Dennis darling—and you'll write me."

He made a grimace.

"You used to write lovely letters when we were engaged."

Barbara laughed mockingly.

"What a shame that the busy past is in his face. That she was bitternately jealous of that past and of the letters he had written to Pauline."

The guard blew his whistle, and Pauline leaned out of the window and put her arm around her husband's neck.

"Good-bye, my precious, take care of yourself. Take care of him, Barbara."

PETITION

To The Honorable, The House of Commons of Canada, in Parliament Assembled:
We, The Undersigned Citizens, of the Great Dominion of Canada, being a free and independent people, in whom resides the right of self-determination, do hereby vigorously protest against the action of the Radio Commission of Canada, in censoring or attempting to censor and exclude from public broadcast radio lectures on matters pertaining to the Bible and of public interest, and particularly the lectures of J. P. Rutherford, pertaining to divine prophecy.

We have faith in the Bible as the Word of God, and that it was written for the instruction of man. Many sincere persons claim that the Bible prophecies apply particularly to our day and bear direct relationship to the present world situation and "darker" days, "revelation" for relief. We are entitled to hear these questions publicly discussed free from all censor, otherwise our freedom is taken away. Those who object or may be offended by such lectures, may turn their radio dials and decline to hear.

We, therefore, demand that the Dominion Parliament take immediate action removing from the Radio Commission the power to censor, hinder or prevent such lectures by radio and that people be left free to determine what they may or may not wish to hear. We of world wide repute and eminently qualified to explain the Bible, such as we believe Rutherford is, can be helpful to the people and we demand that our radio stations be permitted to publicly broadcast his lectures. The people shall the people continue to enjoy freedom or shall a few men deprive them of their God-given rights? Sign the above petition and mail to the following address: Watch Tower Society, 1000 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.
